a Chafing-Dish Party.

One of the fads of the young girls just at present is the collection of four leaf clovers. They are not gathered for good luck, nor are they worn in the left shoe, but they are carefully pressed, and when a sufmonograms and crests have been used. The clovers are not exactly limited to four-leafs but five and six-leaf clovers may be added and sometimes a few, a very few, threeleaf clovers may be used. They are put on close together and the effect is really very pretty. Of course the glass covers them and keeps them in good order. The four-leaf clover frames are quite the thing for a birthday present to a dear friend, with the face of the giver surrounded by these omens of one friend to another, as they passed a young lady on the street and began talking of her agreeable qualities. "Yes," the friend continued, "she knows how to tell a story in a way to awaken your interest, and so that you do not see the end of it when but she can also sit at the end of a table, the ingredients standing around, and half a dozen or more in the party watching her, and the lace never gets in her way when she way that is really artistic. She is such a contrast to the girl who gets red and flurried and never speaks from the time she begins until all are served, making such a serious business of it all. A chaing dish party is for cun, I always think, and when Miss A. (mentioning the first girl) does the cooking it is fun, for her stories are always jolly ones."

The children have their literary clubs and their sewing clubs and their dance clubs and their card clubs, almost as much as do their elders. A little miss of eleven has been a member of a whist club for several meetings and she enjoys the game. She plays very well, but she has begun to realize that it is the girl in society who keeps the party going and makes it a success. She went home from the whist club the other day and her mother asked her about it. "I played with George F. to-day," she said. "He can't make talk. To tell you the truth, he's just a sissy boy and ought to get him to a nun-nery and pray for the rest of his life."

Kindergarten Excursion.

A most unique affair for charity will be the kindergarten excursion around the Belt road next Saturday afternoon. The trip can only be given by the Union Railway Company, and it is by the courtesy tendered by Mr. J. Q. Van Winkle to the members of the first section that the opportunity is now given.
